THE IMPORTANCE OF AGGLOMERATION PROCESSES IN MODERN URBAN PLANING

ABSTRACT

This article provides information on the importance of agglomeration processes in urban planning. Until the 1990s, urban agglomerations in Uzbekistan were based on industrial production, which was primarily focused on economic efficiency, but today attitudes toward them have changed. Free competition in various fields, the correct and rational use of land resources, the strengthening of the competitiveness of small towns and villages, the consistent solution of problems such as the creation of a single labor market require a new approach to urban agglomerations. The formation of urban agglomerations is one of the stages of urbanization. The agglomeration has monocentric and polycentric settlements. A monocentric population agglomeration is formed around a single large nuclear city, while a polycentric population agglomeration is formed around several nuclear cities. The proximity of the settlements to the agglomeration of the settlement is characterized by the fact that the population travels from the suburbs to the city center for work. Today, as urbanization intensifies, urban agglomerations are proliferating around the world. It should be noted that the UN experts have identified the largest agglomerations in the global economic system, called "megacities", and in 2016 included 23 largest cities. Among them are Tokyo - 37.2 million people, Delhi - 22.7 million people, New York - 20.4 million people, Istanbul - 14 million people and others. Of these, 4 have a population of 20 million, 8 have a population of 15 million, 25 have a population of 10 million, and 61 have a population of more than 5 million. In developed countries agglomeration processes get During this period, megacities are being formed as a result of the aggregation of separate agglomerations. The growth of cities is important due to the formation of urban lifestyles in the suburbs, i.e. the intensification of urbanization. The main indicator of urbanization is the growth of the number of urban areas and the growth of the share of urban population in the total population.
