Annotatsiya. Ushbu tezisdagi siyosiy nutqning xususiyatlari, xususan, ingliz tilidagi siyosiy nutqlarning lingvistik jihatlari mushohada qilinadi. Siyosiy nutqlar ko'pincha ma'lum bir madaniy va ijtimoiy kontekstda shakllanadi va turli lingvistik vositalardan foydalanadi, chunki ma'ruzachining maqsadlaridan biri jamoatchilikni ishontirishdir. Ushbu tadqiqot, birinchi navbatda, ba'zi mualliflarning fikrlarini taqdim etish orqali ingliz tilidagi siyosiy nutqning asosiy xususiyatlarini ta'kidlashni maqsad qilgan.

Kalit so'zlar: siyosiy nutq, siyosiy til, ritorika

Annotation. This thesis analyses the characteristics of political discourse, in particular, the linguistic features of political speeches in English. Political speeches are often formed in a specific cultural and social context and use a variety of linguistic means, being one of the speaker's goals is to convince the public. This study, firstly, intends to emphasize the main features of political discourse in English by presenting the views of some authors.

Key words: political discourse, political language, rhetoric

Аннотация. В диссертации анализируются особенности политического дискурса, в частности языковые особенности политических речей на английском языке. Политические выступления часто формируются в конкретном культурном и социальном контексте и используют разнообразные языковые средства, являясь одной из целей оратора - убедить публику. Данное исследование, во-первых, призвано подчеркнуть основные черты политического дискурса на английском языке путем представления взглядов некоторых авторов.

Ключевые слова: политический дискурс, политический язык, риторика.

The study of political languages dates back to ancient Greek and Roman times. Over the years the field has been continuously developed. At the end of the 17th century, Thomas Hobbes introduced modern political philosophy, which is considered to be the basis of today's political science discipline. Later, the concept of politics was associated with language and introduced into the study of “political language” by many pioneers.⁵⁸ Many scholars, such as Lasswell, have argued that political language is considered a language of influence as it intends to influence people. Thus, Van Dijk stated that the language of politics is the language of power.⁵⁹ According to Schaffner and Chilton, the development of the field of political discourse is regarded as a complex human activity, so a deep study of political discourse is needed. Scholars further emphasize the importance of learning political language, along with other important factors such as culture and audience that can influence political language.⁶⁰ Some scholars say that it is extremely difficult to define the concept since the range of meanings of political discourse is wide, but there are also scholars who believe that it is related to everything that is said publicly in relation to politics. Here we see that political discourse is not just a communication; it incorporates together clear goals and specific participants, functioning as power.

Feldman and Landshire argue that the most common term referring to communication in the political sphere is the term "political discourse". They define it as the way language is used in public communications found in newspapers, television, radio stations, congressional debates and election speeches, etc. The language in political discourse usually has great power since its aim is to evoke public reaction.⁶¹ Thus, the political discourse of mass media has every possibility to control the views and attitudes of its audience.

Political speech is usually characterized as a complex, powerful and ambiguous type of language due to its richness in cultural and ideological components. As in any other field, political language has many terms, jargon and slogans, the meaning of which can vary from country to country. It is used to achieve specific political goals. Also, a very important feature of political speech is its tendency to use rhetorical language. According to Charteris-Black, the effectiveness in political speech is often the result of a combination of rhetorical strategies. Therefore, it is as interesting to observe the interaction of the various strategies as it is to consider each strategy individually.⁶² Jones and Wareing argue that the ability to convey the message that the speaker and the listener want the same thing plays an important role in the process of establishing an ideology.⁶³ To achieve a sense of unity between the audience and the speaker, politicians often use symbols to strengthen national unity.⁶⁴

A metaphor is a linguistic sign that gives a concrete label to an abstract idea. It can be possible because of the regarded similarity between objects and concepts with respect to the specific characteristics that a person wants to convey. Lakoff and Johnson consider human conceptual systems to be metaphorical. A metaphor is not just a linguistic tool. In fact, they permeate perception, thought, and behavior.⁶⁵ Common metaphors of politics come from sports and war fields. At the same time, a political campaign can be viewed as a military action, but a military action takes the form of an argument. In Western societies, the two concepts of “conflict” and “war” are understood to be closely related despite the fact that they generally refer to different types of problems.⁶⁶

Thus, this thesis presents the features of political discourse and the brief overview of these features in English. It also identifies implicit statements in the political language and find examples of linguistic strategies. Taking into consideration the definitions of political discourse given by a variety of authors, we can say that political discourse is the unit of all speech acts.

THE USE OF PERIPHRASES IN JOURNALISTIC TEXTS

Abstract. This article is devoted to the use of periphrasis as a stylistic device in different journalistic texts. The article analyzes typology of periphrases.

Keywords: periphrasis, figurative, metaphoric, metonymic, logical, euphemistic, language, Аннотация. Данная статья посвящена использованию перифраза как стилистического приема в различных публицистических текстах. В статье анализируется типология перифраз.

Ключевые слова: перифраз, образный, метафорический, метонимический, логический, эвфемистический, язык, публицистический.

Periphrasis is a stylistic device that uses longer phrases or words instead of shorter ones to make sentences or speech more expressive. According to A.G.Gurochkina periphrasis is word of thoughts [7, 15]. In other words, it is an expression of what people think or renaming a particular object when it is not an exact name. For example, “heat-loving bacteria – known as thermopiles – can become dormant spores when they are exposed to cold” or “The proteins that make mucus have evolved in at least 15 independent instances in mammals, possibly by co-opting existing proteins into becoming mucus-producers.” (New Scientist, September 3-9, 2022). It is clear with these examples that “heat-loving bacteria” means “thermopiles” and “mucus-producers” means “mammals”.
